Nedbank CIB Market Commentary | CIBMarketComm@Nedbank.co.za | +27 11 294 1753

- The CRB index has recently broken below the rising channel since 2016. The index is currently 7.3% lower for the YTD and 7.9% below the 2016 peak. The main reason for the decline is due to the high concentration of the index on oil, natural gas and gold (cumulative 45% weight). Soft commodities and base metals make up 43% of the index. WTI crude alone carries a 23% weighting in the index, and due to the recent decline in oil, energy and gold costs, the CRB index has declined. We anticipate further downside risks to the oil and gold prices, and this will weigh on the CRB index unless soft commodities and base metals prices rises materially. The CRB index will likely fall closer towards the 2016 low of 155 index points.
- The LME index has paused just below the 3000-point mark, which represents horizontal resistance since 2010. Inventories of base and industrial metals are still quite elevated, weighing on the price. Furthermore, concerns over a slowdown in China and the lower consumption of commodities on the back of a material deceleration in Chinese growth have been weighing on commodity prices in recent weeks. However, we believe the slowdown in Chinese growth will likely materialise in a gradual fashion, and this may have a muted impact on commodity demand. Some counterbalance to any weakening in Chinese demand may be an uptick in global demand. We anticipate better global growth conditions and as a result, we may see demand from Europe, US and some Asian countries rebound, which may be supportive of consumption of commodities over the medium term.
- Commodity currencies have borne the brunt of lower commodity prices recently, with our Commodity currency index weakening by 3.6% in the past 2 weeks, and breaking above the strengthening (declining channel) trend in the process. We need to see a further test of this ceiling level from above and an acceleration higher in order to call a shift in the bias for commodity currencies weaker. The 135-index point level will prove a key pivot level in the near term.

- A stronger dollar over the past day led the gold price sharply lower. Gold spot is at $1239/oz. this morning, losing some $16/oz. overnight. Markets reacted to a hawkish Fed by bidding up the dollar, hence bargain buying in the gold market declined. Gold will likely track the dollar inversely over the medium to longer term, unless we see a material pick up in safe have demand.
- Brent remained within a narrow $1/bbl. trading range yesterday, as markets await inventory data from the US. The $50/bbl. level will likely pose tough support, but the oil price is predisposed to downside risk over the medium term as the supply glut persists.

Cash equities | +2711 535 4030/31

South Africa

- After opening marginally higher, the JSE retreated as platinum and diversified miners sold off aggressively as metal prices retreated. Northam Platinum and Anglo Platinum lost 7% and 5% respectively while Kumba Ore and Glencore Plc, both lost over 3.5%. Gold stocks were among the top performers while retailers lagged. Bidvest added another percent to yesterday's strong rally. MTN closed over 2.5% lower. The company reported its first quarterly update under Rob Shute and while revenue increased over 7% year on year, investors were concerned with the 1.5% quarter on quarter decline drop in subscribers. Value traded was R22bn and the rand was R13.34 to the dollar.

UK/Europe

- European markets opened lower and traded cautiously ahead of the FOMC meeting and the debate between France's presidential rivals. The FTSE lost 2 tenths of a percent. Retailer Sainsbury fell over 5% after it cautioned over ongoing price pressures and the challenging consumer market. The DAX gained 2 tenths of a percent as strong healthcare sector provided support. Chinese conglomerate HNA Group Co. increased its stake in Deutsche Bank to 9.92% becoming its biggest shareholder dwarfing BlackRock's 5.9% holding. The CAC closed flat. Car manufacturers and shares with exposure to metal prices dropped while banks rose. BNP Paribas reported increased trading revenue which helped the bank see a surge in first quarter profit beating expectations. Data released in the region showed that GDP in the European Union grew at 0.5% quarter on quarter while Producer inflation declined from 4.5% to 3.9% year on year.

USA

- U.S. markets closed mixed after spending most of the trading day in negative territory. The Dow closed flat, gaining under a tenth of a percent. The S&P gained a tenth of a percent and the Nasdaq lost 4 tenths of a percent. Focus was on the FOMC meeting which saw the Federal reserve leave rates unchanged with the accompanying statement saying that the labour market has continued to strengthen despite a slow-down in economic activity and it expects economic conditions will warrant a gradual increase in interest rates. The gains by energy shares supported the Dow while weaker communication and consumer sectors weighed on the S&P. Data released by payroll processor ADP showed that private sector employment increased by 177,000 jobs in April in line with expectations and the Institute for Supply Management said its non-manufacturing index rose to 57.5 in April from 55.2 in March.

Asia

- Asian markets are trading mostly lower this morning. The Nikkei remains closed for a bank holiday. Chinese shares traded lower with sentiment waning as regulators recently issued a several directives to curb excessive borrowing and speculation in the equity markets. At the time of writing the Shanghai Composite was down 3 tenths of a percent and Hang Seng was down half a percent. Tencent lost 1.6%. Base metals continued to weaken pushing Australian markets lower for the third consecutive session. Basic material and diversified miners were substantially weaker with Fortescue metals dropping over 4 percent. The ASX managed to limit losses to half a percent as stronger energy, technology and consumer stocks supported the market.

US

- The Fed left interest rates unchanged at 0.75%-1% in a unanimous decision that was cautiously hawkish, and indicated that interest rates will rise gradually over the medium term. Even though economic data was soft in Q1, the Fed indicated that this is transitory and that activity will likely pick up in coming quarters. Inflation is running close to the Fed's 2% target and the labour market is close to full employment, hence the Fed seems on track to raise rates two more times this year. The probability of a hike in June rose to 65% this morning. The Fed is still considering how to begin shrinking its balance sheet, and this will likely begin early 2018, after possible hike in December.
- The US private sector added 177k jobs in April, below the 255k in March, but marginally exceeding expectations of 175k. Most of the jobs created came from the services sector; goods producers only employed 12 thousand more people in April, compares to the 82k addition in the previous month. The construction sector was a key negative contributor, shedding 2000 jobs, after hiring 49 thousand people in March. Within the services sector, the professional business services, education and health and leisure and hospitality industries created a bulk of the jobs. Most of the job creation came from small and mid-sized businesses.
- As the economy falls closer to full employment, we are likely to see the ability of the goods and services sectors to create more jobs become increasingly constrained. Indeed, the Fed's Beige book has already reported many districts are finding it difficult to source skilled labour. Hence wage growth may likely rise on the back of the labour shortage. Restrictive immigration policies will add to the narrowing supply of labour in the US.

Synopsis: We still anticipate 2 more rate hikes by the Fed this year. The main uncertainty is the timing of these hikes; there is a possibility of a rate hike materialising in June and another towards year-end. Growth is expected to accelerate this year, while headline inflation is expected to remain close to, if not above, the 2% target rate over the medium term.

Europe

- Eurozone's GDP growth rate remained unchanged at 0.5% q/q in Q1, in line with forecasts. Better manufacturing activity, business investment, and possible even consumer spending would have aided growth in Q1. As spending remains strong, unemployment has continued to fall, reducing spare capacity in the economy. This will likely be supportive of growth for the rest of the year.
- Underlying inflation is still low and fuel prices fell in Q1, will further aid consumer spending. Spanish growth remains strong, French economy slowed, while Germany and other countries will release their GDP data in coming weeks.

Synopsis: We maintain a view of a weaker euro into year-end especially from overbought levels currently. The ECB will likely maintain easy monetary policy for now although relatively upbeat economic data and inflation metrics will spur an expectation of a tapering in ECB asset purchases later in the year.
